Questions follow murder-suicide

Mother, son seemed to be 'very attached and very devoted'

By ROBYN YOUNG Metro Halifax

With the exception of a collection of flower bouquets adorning the front garden at 6308 Willow St. yesterday in a makeshift memorial, no evidence of the murder-suicide that took place inside the home last week remained

City Police confirmed Saturday that the two bodies found inside the home Friday were Roberta Jollimore, 75, and her son Greg Jollimore, 52. They also confirmed the deaths were the result of a murder-suicide.

"It's believed from our investigation that he (Greg) took his mother's life and then his own," said police spokeswoman Theresa Rath.

Firefighters gained access to the home around 2:30 p.m. Friday after a co-worker of Greg Jollimore —

He first called police last Thursday and officers did a "well-being" check at the house Thursday night but no one answered the door. The colleague called police again Friday when Jollimore still hadn't returned to work, and that's when police decided to enter the home.

the Jollimores said the incident was sad for everyone on the street.

"From what I understand, they were very attached and very devoted to each other," he said yesterday.

Some neighbours speculated the situation was a "mercy killing" because of Roberta Jollimore's illness, he said

"My surmisal would be the same," the neighbour, who did not want his name published, said.

City struggling with crime

Violence serious problem: Report

By RACHEL BOOMER Metro Halifax

Halifax has a real problem with violent crime, and it needs to start working to make residents feel safer, says a new report on violence and public safety.

"This isn't a figment of people's imagination," said Don Clairmont, director of the Atlantic Institute of Criminology, who wrote the report.

"People in HRM are extremely concerned about violence and public safety."

Minorities more often victims

Race relations committee recommended

By RACHEL BOOMER Metro Halifax

Too many black youths are in jail, and too many minority residents are becoming victims of violent crime, says the author of a study on violence and public safety in HRM.

Don Clairmont said Friday his research shows minorities are 1.6 times more likely to worry about violent crime than the population as a whole, and with good reason: they're 2.5 times more likely to have been victims of it.

"I can't believe we can't do better on this," Clairmont told reporters Friday.

He recommended the city establish a race relations committee that meets regularly, and that it hire more minority employees.

David Sparks Sr., head of the Dr. Martin Luther King project in Nova Scotia, organized a 2007 march in North Preston against violence.

David Sparks Sr. says the black community must work with the city to help improve public safety.

Sparks said Friday while the city isn't doing enough to get Halifax's black residents involved, the black community needs to become more politically active.

"It works both ways. We have a responsibility as well," Sparks said. "We've got to make more opportunities available to youth at risk; we've got to open up doors to integrate more into the mainstream."

Part of the problem, he said, is that African Nova Scotians in Halifax haven't reached consensus on what they need and want to improve lives.

Recommendations

» Some of the recommendations made in the report: Hire a full-time city public safety co-ordina-Set up a city race relations committee. ▶ Hire more minorities to work for HRM.

▶A new, community support office for police: 10 staff, eight of them work-ing in the urban core. ▶Build a safe taxi pickup location downtown, and change licensing rules so there are more taxis on the road.

▶ Expand Metro Transit service on weekend nights to help students stay safe.

▶Set up mental health and drug courts in HRM. DExpand restorative justice for serious or repeat offenders, and for adults. (It's currently only available to young offenders.)

Make catching and prosecuting violent, repeat offenders downtown a priority.

ity for out-of-control More housing, particularly supervised housing for adults and youths

Teens get run of the House

Students stage debate exercise at legislature

By ROBYN YOUNG
Metro Halifax

A bill passed in the legislature over the weekend will lower the voting age to 16, but the members who passed it weren't much older than 16 themselves — and the passing of the bill was only an exercise.

Thirty-eight high school students from around the province took part in a model legislature at Province House that started Friday and finished yesterday afternoon.

Keith Lehwald, a Grade 12 student from Halifax West High School, said the bill debates were the best part and they were able to pass the voting-age bill but did not pass a bill that would give a 35 per cent tax credit to farmers who produce ethanol.

Alex Safatli, Maureen MacIsaac, Keith Lehwald, Neil West and Lee Mitchell all participated in the Education Department's "model legislature" over the weekend at Province House.

"The actual debates in the House, it was a great exercise in public speaking," Lehwald said. He plans to take a double major in political science and French when he heads off to university next year and said he'll likely become a lawyer or politician.

This weekend's event was the sixth annual model legislature organized by the province's Department of Education.

The Tax Reform Committee is looking for public feedback on its ideas for a new tax system. The Committee believes a new tax system should be service-based, consider the ability to pay and be based on solid principles. They are also proposing that:

- There would be 9 municipal tax rates, each levied at a flat rate per home, defined by service: hydrants, solid waste, local roads, local transit, sidewalks, community recreation facilities, regional roads, regional transit, and a broad regional tax (for police, fire, libraries, and other costs).
- Multi-unit buildings (apartments and condos) would be taxed at a reduced rate.
- There would be an increase in support for lowerincome families.
- The deed transfer tax would be eliminated.
- Assessment would remain on provincial services such as mandatory education.

First patrol draws mixed reactions

Angels encouraged by Saturday results

By PAUL MCLEOD Metro Halifax

If anyone knows downtown Halifax at night it's Caesar.

Gary "Caesar" Julien is a popular street musician who plays outside the Dome nightclub every weekend. He has seen a renaissance in the last six months. He says the increased police presence has transformed the downtown from a Wild West environment to friendlier place.

"Since Christmas things have changed drastically for the better. It was black, now it's white," said Julien. "The police have changed their attitudes. They talk to the people more. They're smiling now. Before they weren't smiling."

But there's always some trouble, and that's why he was happy to see the Guardian Angels on their first patrol Saturday night. The more eyes looking out for people the better, he figures.

That's what Curtis Sliwa is hoping for. Sliwa led the freshly graduated Halifax patrol Saturday night as it walked around the downtown core, aiming to keep the peace. The New York-based Angels founder said Halifax is unique because of its compact bar district and central hot spots like pizza corner.

As Sliwa and the new Halifax Angels — five men and three women ranging in age from 18 to 49 - walked

Guardian Angel Brandon

"You guys need to be here," said one woman eating pizza.

"If they stop one crime it's worth it," said 24-year-old Greg Branton. "If they stop one person from getting raped or robbed, then it's worth it, no matter all of that other (controversy)."

Many people stopped to shake hands with the Angels. A couple men openly joked with them, but left once police officers got close. The police were friendly with the Angels, sharing pointers throughout the night, even though police Chief Frank Beazley opposes the group setting up in Halifax.

But others were skeptical. One bar-goer referred to them as "mall police" while another dismissed them as "basically an organized gang."

Others said the Angels were too old or small to maintain the peace.

"If I'm getting beaten up what's that four-foot girl going to be able to do?" said one passerby.

The Angels said they were encouraged with their reception. As their night ended without incident, they all said they plan to keep coming out.

"I got bullied a bit in junior high, so I was always worried walking home. Nobody should really have to feel worried and look over their shoulder like that. So I thought this was a way I could help out and make people feel safer," said Brandon, who did not give his last name for safety reasons. Brandon, who is the youngest Angel at 18 years old, is also a Citadel High student.

Tory plan to ease applicant backlog still under fire

It is the nearly a million cases caught in Canada's huge immi-

The government's proposed changes to the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act are to be voted on in the coming weeks. No one disputes the long waits are unacceptable. But a growing number of immigration experts and community groups say Finley's proposal will not reduce the backlog and will, in fact, lengthen the wait because the amendments only apply to new applications filed after Feb. 26.

> If passed, the legislative changes would give Finley the power to reject applications even if they meet all the criteria and instruct officials to cherry-pick immi-

Phoenix touches down

NASA probe to assess Mars' ability to sustain life

A small science probe blazed through the salmon-coloured skies of Mars yesterday, touching down on a frozen desert at the planet's north pole to search for water and assess conditions for sustaining life, NASA officials said.

The spacecraft, known as Phoenix, landed at 7:53 p.m. after a do-or-die plunge through the planet's thin atmosphere and thruster-jet landing to the Mars surface. It marked the first time a spacecraft had successfully landed at one of the planet's polar regions.

"It was a hell of a lot scarier than the two Mars rovers," NASA's space sciences chief Ed Weiler said, referring to the cushioned landings of the Spirit and Opportunity rovers.

Pulled by Mars' gravity, Phoenix was tearing along at 12,700 mph before it entered the atmosphere, which slowed the craft so it could pop out a parachute and fire thruster rockets to gently float to the ground.

Scientists found in 2002 that Mars' polar regions have vast reservoirs of water frozen beneath a shallow layer of soil. Phoenix was launched Aug. 4, 2007, to sample the water and determine if the right ingredients for life are present.

Power firm making a splash

Bullfrog Power, a purveyor of "green" electricity in Ontario, has in less than three years made itself synonymous with renewable power, despite being a tiny swimmer in the province's energy pond.

The company handles a minuscule fraction of the electricity generated in the province - just three ten-thousandths of a per cent, or 0.0003. Yet, it's de rigueur for those who wish to be on the side of the environmental angels to announce they're "bullfrogpowered."

Bullfrog buys power in bulk from wind-powered or small hydro generating stations and resells it. Torstar News Service

Argentina Soy windfall

Farm groups gather in a mass rally yesterday in Rosario City to protest Argentina's agricultural policy, ahead of a separate rally in support of the government's unpopular soy tax. More talks between the farmers and government are to take place this week. Many farmers have switched to high-profit soy, which accounted for $13.5 million US in export income last year, but disagree with the government as to how to handle the soy windfall.

Pens shuffle deck after Game 1 loss

Dupuis bumped off Crosby's line

By MATTHEW WUEST Metro Halifax

The Pittsburgh Penguins aren't wasting any time shaking up their lineup in the Stanley Cup final.

Penguins head coach Michel Therrien has made changes to every line, including that of Cole Harbour's Sidney Crosby, following Saturday's 4-0 loss to the Detroit Red Wings in Game 1.

Game 2 is tonight at 9.

Crosby, who had three shots and a minus-1 rating on Saturday, will have Ryan Malone on his left wing instead of Pascal Dupuis. Sniper Marian Hossa stays

Malone, who had skated with Evgeni Malkin and Petr Sykora, has been replaced by Maxime Talbot. Dupuis goes to the third line with Jordan Staal and Tyler Kennedy, while veteran Gary Roberts will return to the lineup on the fourth line

"We've done it (changed lines) all season, so I don't think it's a huge deal," Crosby said in a press conference. "I don't think anybody's role changes when they change lines. It's just different looks and sometimes it depends on who coach wants to play certain lines against and how they

"I wouldn't change anything, to be honest," Crosby said. "We had our chances and we didn't put them in. I don't think they did a whole lot to shut us down completely."

Therrien said Game 1 was Pittsburgh's "worst performance of the playoffs" but is hopeful the line changes will

"Every team has to make adjustments through the course of the playoffs," Therrien explained. "We believe those adjustments are going to help us to get success."

Near-perfect Dixon claims Indy

Patrick in spotlight after crashing out

Scott Dixon of New Zealand held on from pole to win the Indianapolis 500 yesterday, while Danica Patrick was knocked out of the race in a pit lane crash.

After stealing the spotlight in the buildup to the race, Patrick overshadowed the New Zealander's victory when she was taken out by Australian Ryan Briscoe during the final fuel stop.

While Dixon was speeding toward victory, the crowd stood and watched as an incensed Patrick climbed out of her car to confront Briscoe be-

"It's probably best I didn't get there, isn't it," said Patrick, who became the first woman to win an IndyCar race with her victory in Japan last month.

While many in the crowd of over 300,000 came to the Brickyard hoping to watch Patrick make 500 history, she would have needed something spectacular over the final laps to overtake Dixon, who ran a cool and near faultless race.

Over the last two laps it was left to Brazil's Vitor Meira to take up the challenge, hounding Dixon to the finish line and crossing 1.75 seconds behind.

"What a day, man," roared Dixon as he stepped out of his car. "I just couldn't believe it. You just thought something was going to go wrong."

Shawn Turple has a weight off his shoulders after winning the Carquest Maritime Pro Stock Tour's season-opener.

The 29-year-old Enfield native took the checkered flag in the Lucas Oil 100 at Scotia Speedworld on Saturday, his first Carquest victory since early in the 2006 season.

Turple was lucky he didn't fall asleep at the wheel, as the race was delayed by rain and a 10-car wreck and didn't finish until nearly 2 a.m. yesterday. He didn't grab the lead until Lap 80, when he finally got past Timberlea's Wayne Smith.

Smith, who won five races last season and finished second overall in the Carquest title hunt, placed fifth, while second-place Dave O'Blenis of Salisbury, N.B., third-place Mike MacKenzie of Dartmouth, and fourth-place Brad Mann of Glen Livet, N.B., rounded out the top five.

Turple came second last year, missing the tour title by a hair.

"Especially after last year ... we finished second and third in five or six races and we were so close (to winning it all) ... It was good to start the season with a win," Turple said.

Jazic back on pitch for red and white

By MATTHEW WUEST Metro Halifax

Bedford's Ante Jazic is back on the field with the Canadian national men's soccer team this week.

The 32-year-old defender was named to Canada's 23-man roster last week and opened training camp yesterday in Seattle in preparation for a pair of friendly matches.

Canada will face Brazil in Seattle on Saturday before heading to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to play Panama on June 4. Jazic recently returned to the lineup with Major League Soccer's Los Angeles Galaxy after spending more than four months on the sidelines recovering from ankle surgery. He played

62 minutes in L.A.'s 2-1 loss to the Vancouver Whitecaps in an exhibition game in Edmonton last week, but has yet to make his MLS debut this season.

Jazic started 16 games for the Galaxy last year.

The national team is preparing for the second stage of 2010 FIFA World Cup Qualifiers South Africa in mid-June.

In other MLS news, the New England Revolution released Halifax's Matthew Britner on Thursday. The 23-year-old defender originally signed with the Revs on April 9 after being picked in the third round (41st overall) of the MLS SuperDraft.

He didn't play an MLS game, but did make three starts with one of the Revolution's minor-league squads.

"I didn't have any funding," the 23-year-old black belt says, and she spent a couple fruitless months trying to get her Choi Kwang Do school up and running.

When that didn't work, she took out a Students in Business loan through the Centre for Entrepreneurship and Education, with the help of Saint Mary's University's Business Development Centre

Part of that process was developing a business plan, which helped Green focus > on her target market. She originally aimed at university students and people aged 25 to 40, but "the more I learned about the martial arts business, the more I realized the importance of having children as part of the school. They bring the excitement and enthusiasm — and their friends and parents."

Green could be on the verge of a breakthrough — next month she and her business partner Dawson Wambolt, a former member of the Canadian Forces, are travelling to Toronto to appear on The Dragons' Den — the CBC's reality TV entrepreneurial show — to pitch a martial arts/military boot camp for ordinary people.

"It would completely change our lives," Green says of gaining the Dragons' financial backing. She describes it as "an amazing opportunity" that would put rockets on their planned growth, allowing them to take their "total fitness" program to the next level.

A key piece of advice she offers other would-be business people is to spend your money carefully. She put a lot into advertising, but could only afford sporadic

"It just doesn't have the repetition to work. I learned that the hard way — and that's a lot of money when you're starting out," Green says. "I thought it would be pretty easy to get 10 students in the door, but today I know that's difficult. You always have to be marketing — for me, that's a lot of networking and special programming."

Similarly, she invested a lot of money in software to help run the school, but now feels she got it too soon to make it worthwhile financially.

Asked what advice she would give her younger self, she thinks for a moment and says:

"It's OK for it to go slow, and to take your time with it. When you're starting out ... there is a sense of urgency that keeps you moving, but not always in the right direction."

Anything goes in a work contract

When it comes to employment contracts, all is fair in love and war, as pretty much anything can be incorporated into the deal. Employees should, therefore, heware of the following terms

PROBATIONARY PERI-

ODS: Agreeing to a probationary period allows an employer to dismiss for reasons that would otherwise be insufficient, as long as a proper audition is given. It needs only to show that, in its opinion, the employee was unsuitable for the position, with suitability including character, competence and compatibility.

BONUSES: If tied to annual compensation and paid as a matter of course, seldom are bonuses truly optional. Unless a contract provides otherwise, employees cannot be deprived of this pay upon termination. And even where contracts expressly state that bonuses are not payable following termination, court cases have construed that term to mean the date of legal termination, which can be many months following the day that the employee actively ceases

FIXED-TERM CON-

TRACTS: Employees hired to complete a defined task or for a specific term are not entitled to more employment.

NOTICE OF TERMINA-

TION: Every employment contract includes, at a minimum, an implied rule that employees can only be fired with proper notice or severance. But (and in law there is always an exception) if a contract specifically defines some lesser period, even if manifestly unfair, the employee will often be held to that term, as it is the unfortunate bargain that he or she made.

NO CONSTRUCTIVE DIS-MISSAL: Once employment begins, significant and negative changes to the job are prohibited, without proper advance notice or employee consent. If serious changes, such as location, pay or a demotion, are imposed, the employee may reject them and sue for wrongful dismissal damages. If, however, a cleverly drafted contract can be construed as contemplating the disputed change, the employee may have to accept it.

RESIGNATION: Unless constructive dismissal is asserted, employees cannot simply pack up and leave; notice of resignation must be provided.

Snipes granted bail while lawyers appeal

Actor Wesley Snipes was granted bail Thursday pending an appeal of his conviction and sentencing last month to three years in prison for failing to file income tax returns for 1999 through 2001.

Snipes had been set to surrender to federal prison week of June to begin serving his sentence, and prosecutors had earlier vowed to oppose any request to allow him to remain free pending an appeal.

Judge William Terrell Hodges wrote that he was of Snipes' appeal arguments. But Hodges agreed to bail, noting that Snipes otherwise could easily serve his entire sentence reached on his appeal.

Snipes, who had been indicted on felony tax fraud charges, was convicted only of three misdemeanours.

At his sentencing in April, prosecutors said the actor had earned more 1999, but had filed no tax returns or paid any taxes.

The day of Snipes' sentencing, his lawyers brought checks totalling $5 million, which they gave to Internal Revenue Service agents during a recess.

Judge sets new Spector trial date

A Los Angeles judge has set a September date for pioneering rock producer Phil Spector's second trial on charges that he murdered actress Lana Clarkson in the foyer of his mock castle in 2003.

The jury in Spector's first deadlocked 10-2 in favour of a guilty verdict in September 2007, forcing Fidler to declare a mistrial, but prosecutors immediately said they would bring the case again.

Most of Spector's defence team quit in October causing delays in the retrial. The new defence team is seeking to have Fidler removed from the case, claiming he is biased against the 68-year-old rock producer.

Clarkson, 40, was found dead of a gunshot to the mouth early on the morning of Feb. 3, 2003 after Spector's driver called police to say the record producer had killed someone.

Prosecutors say Spector, who is credited with revolutionizing pop music with his early 1960s "Wall of Sound" recordings, shot Clarkson while trying to prevent her from leaving.

Do not enter a digit into a box if it already appears elsewhere in the same 3x3 zone, or in the same row across the puzzle, or column down the puzzle.
